Nanaimo's growth outpaces Vancouver Island, BC and even Canada's averages

1st State of the Economy report shows insight & statistics for Nanaimo's economy

Summary

The City of Nanaimo has just released its first annual State of the Economy report, and the statistics show that Nanaimo is a growing community and a hotspot for new businesses, development and residents.

The report outlines our economy by analyzing the make-up of Nanaimo, from population to demographics and development to infrastructure. Data, analysis and insights on Nanaimo's current economic and business conditions show that Nanaimo's growth is outpacing Vancouver Island, BC and even Canada's averages.

At almost 100,000 residents, the City's population has grown by 35% since 2001. With that growth, Nanaimo is seeing greater diversity within our population. In recent years, the majority of new Nanaimo residents have come from other areas within BC.

6,233 businesses were licensed in the City of Nanaimo in 2019 with the largest number of licenses within the Construction sector, followed by the Professional/Scientific/Technical sector and then the Retail sector. This is a 9% increase in licensed businesses over the past decade, and a 16.7% increase in businesses with employees.

The service industry sector accounted for 83.1% of Nanaimo's employment base in 2019, and the goods-producing sector accounted for 16.9%. The greatest number of jobs are provided by the retail, healthcare and social assistance sector.

These are just a few of the facts that show Nanaimo's growing and desirable economy. Read the full State of Nanaimo's Economy report for a much more detailed look.
